Domestic Violence in Central Oklahoma - Why it Matters

Domestic violence and abuse is prevalent in every community and affects all people regardless of age, socio-economic status, sexual orientation, gender, race, religion or nationality.

1 in 4 women and 1 in 9 men...will experience severe intimate partner physical violence, sexual violence, and/or stalking that results in injury, fear, post-traumatic stress disorder or use of victim services.¹

People who experience domestic abuse are 12x more likely to end their lives by suicide than non-victims.²

Access to social support, material necessities and confidence in the ability to control one's environment can protect against development of worsening mental health concerns.³

The devastating consequences of intimate partner abuse can last a lifetime and cross generations.

Boundary and consent training to prevent intimate partner violence.
Twenty states have a state policy that requires K-12 schools to teach curriculum on healthy relationships, consent, boundaries and/or sex education. These same states also have the lowest rates in the nation for domestic-violence related homicides and teen pregnancy. Currently, Oklahoma has the 11th highest domestic-violence related homicide rate for women and the 3rd highest teen birth rate. Could Oklahoma reduce the occurrence of intimate partner violence and teen birth by mandating and funding evidence-based, comprehensive, medically accurate and culturally competent sex education programs that include training on healthy relationships, consent and boundaries?

State family medical leave act for recovery from trauma.
Family Medical Leave Act (FMLA) is the only federal law that provides job-guaranteed leave from work for employees. This law, however, does not explicitly mention domestic or sexual violence as qualifying circumstances. Could Oklahoma support survivors by creating state family or medical leave laws that provide unpaid job-guaranteed time off to heal from serious physical or mental health conditions including conditions resulting from intimate partner abuse?

Job-guaranteed leave for justice.
Eleven states provide the most comprehensive support to employed survivors through statutes providing unpaid, job-guaranteed leave or leave as a reasonable accommodation. Could Oklahoma join these states and more fully support survivors of domestic or sexual assault by creating a law that guarantees unpaid leave or leave as a reasonable accommodation? This would allow survivors to:

- Go to civil court to obtain protection for themselves or family members
- Seek medical attention for injuries caused by abuse
- Obtain services from a victim services program
- Retain legal counsel
- Go to criminal court to participate in legal proceedings

These laws could also prohibit the employer from discriminating against an employee for exercising their right to use this unpaid leave.
